CAREER PROFILE

Dr. Shirley Feldmann-Jensen is a global thinker and leader with policy expertise at the intersection of disaster risk management and human outcomes. A rich range of academic, disaster risk management, and public health emergency form my professional experience in both international and domestic settings. I am dedicated to fostering the translation of theory to meaningful practice that can build greater resilience in communities.

LEADERSHIP PHILOSOPHY

Modeling leadership that builds relationships between the individual and the team, the organization and the meta-community, and the local to the global.

RESEARCH FOCUS

Emphasis is given to foundational elements to collaboratively advance the professionalization of disaster risk management, and on building community resilience to disruptive hazards.

- Piloting educational approaches to reflect the spectrum of drivers influencing future disaster risk management needs.
- Processes and policies for increasing adaptive capacity at interface of disasters, social vulnerability to disaster, and human health outcomes.
- Organizational influences on disaster risk management and mechanisms for reducing risk in communities.

EDUCATIONAL PHILOSOPHY

To foster a love of continual learning in others and to empower others to positively influence disaster resilience in their communities, region, state, and beyond.
